Since we're going to be dealing with clichés here, I'll start off with one close to home: lazy internet journalism. As nine out of ten Google users will attest, there are two working artists named Sally Ann Rowland. One is from Canada and does uncanny valley Photoshop stuff I can't suss out. We like the other one because she's sassy and Australian (there's no place like home), and she's got a solo show coming up at Fremantle Arts Centre.

Clichéd concept art is as common as a henchman with bad aim- a dime a dozen, you might say- but Bums on Stars has its thinking cap on. Rowland's all about taking the clichés from everyday ephemera like banal conversations and Women's Weekly and decomposing them back into clichéd teatowels and mugs. Gift store regulars become entwined with forgettable pleasantries in an unholy ouroboros of personal and commercial triviality- what was that about life's lemons and lemonade?

Even though beauty is in the eye of the beholder, this is definitely worth a look: Sally's future is so bright she's got to wear shades. Don't put off tomorrow what you can do today - head down there- time is money!
